“By way of truth you shall survive.”

January 4, 2011

There is one thing worse than war, starting a war with no concept, intention, or plan for achieving victory. Using the standard of real world performance, it appears that no one in the United States Military or Government has a clue regarding what must be accomplished to achieve victory in war. Perhaps they are too preoccupied with sustaining a state of crisis for exploitation by politicians and maintaining corporate profitability of their future post-military and post-government employers. Engaging in war for any purpose other than achieving victory is torturous long term national suicide and evil.

The ability to defeat another military force on the battlefield is necessary, but not sufficient to achieve victory in war. As demonstrated by the United States in Vietnam, Iraq and Afghanistan, you can have military superiority, win all the battles, and still lose the war. More is required than military superiority on the battlefield. There are three historically demonstrated means of achieving complete victory over your enemy.

Integration was the solution used in Babylonia. The Babylonians defeated their enemies on the battlefield then destroyed their social organization by putting the entire population in chains, marching them all to Babylonia and integrating them into Babylonian society where they could be directly supervised.

Extermination was the Mongol solution. When Genghis Khan defeated his enemies on the battlefield, he left nothing behind. His soldiers killed everything down to the last farm animal after raping each and every one of them.

Assimilation was the Roman method. The Romans defeated their enemies on the battlefield, then assimilated the surviving population into the Roman Empire by appointing a local political figure Roman Administrator who was held personally responsible for local behavior that would inconvenience Rome.

No one at the Pentagon, or elsewhere in Washington, is actively engaged in achieving any of these three means of defeating our enemies anywhere we currently have “wars” going on, including the “war on drugs.” Losing the war on drugs is particularly telling because drugs are inanimate objects with no central nervous system or ability to fight back. The current war on drugs insanity is an example of what happens when policy is based upon legal fictions.

Degenerating to these historical success models is highly undesirable. To avoid the destructive consequences of using these three methods of defeating enemies, it is important to understand why each of them work and create more effective means of accomplishing the same thing. To do that, we need a precise objective description of what social processes are.

Human beings are biological computers with central nervous systems consisting of neural structures fabricated from the sensory life experiences of the individual. These resulting neural structures are biological programs. Meaning occurs when a biological program (neural structure) is built that processes repeated sensory experiences in the same way. Some key types of neural structures we need to take notice of are simulations of external reality (reality simulations), simulations of individual network memberships, simulations of self and metaprograms that organize and control other programs, language skills for example.

Reality simulations are extremely important because they determine the survivability of each individual. Each reality simulation must have sufficient goodness of fit with external objective reality that an individual can interact with changes in objective reality in a way that sustains their existence. For example, someone under the influence of LSD who jumps off a building believing they can fly is acting upon a reality simulation with a 0% goodness of fit with external reality. Investors who trusted Bernie Madhoff operated under poor goodness of fit reality simulations that resulted from a conflict between survival metaprograms and greed metaprograms.

Another important aspect of reality simulations is that network members (such as Congressmen and Senators) can have a specific reality simulation in common. The survivability of a network depends upon the shared reality simulation goodness of fit with external reality. If a network is destroyed by reliance upon a reality simulation with a low goodness of fit with external reality, all networks that rely upon that network can be destroyed. The reality simulation that it does not matter how much money the United States borrows might be an example of a Congressional reality simulation that has a low goodness of fit with objective reality.

The Babylonian method of separation and integration was successful because it destroyed or limited the ability of former network members of the captive population to activate the stored programs, metaprograms, and reality simulations of one another that identified them as members of the former nation-state networks. How reality operated was altered to the extent their collective survival programs no longer had sufficient goodness of fit for their nation-state to exist.

Extermination works because the biocomputers containing all the programs, metaprograms, and reality simulations are destroyed. Everything is permanently deleted. As it turns out, this is the only solution that actually requires use of violence.

The Roman method of assimilation worked by keeping the networks, programs, metaprograms, and reality simulations intact, but making them subservient to a larger network structure with different metaprograms and reality simulations. Extermination was a last resort used when specific networks refused to be assimilated.

With this understanding, it is possible to identify more precise and sophisticated sets of strategies and tactics to defeat enemies large and small in number.

If an individual, network, society, or nation-state is sufficiently inflexible, it should be possible to alter external reality sufficiently that their survival programs fall below the level necessary to sustain their continued existence or level of attainment. This method should be effective against small groups of elites who can only survive in a narrow set of circumstances. For example, a group of elites who remain in power by controlling gunpowder-based weapons could be disadvantaged if the population developed electricity-based weapons which did not have the same production and use choke points controlled by the elite group.

Additional methods of defeating an enemy revolve around the direct elimination or removal of key biocomputers that would cause the collapse of a network or the direct alteration of programs and metaprograms. A little thought by astute individuals should identify effective strategies and tactics for implementation. Running amok in the streets does not rise to this level of sophistication. I will elaborate on the import of this.

The most successful liars are those who activate your own ideology and belief programs to have you act against your own best interest. When someone jerks you around by your emotions, watch your back. Once you identify this happening, you may alter your own programs to better fit objective reality. When you do that, the person manipulating your programs has lost power.

An important set of programs everyone needs to acquire is the ability to determine the truth. For example, there is a reason for the high error rate in our intelligence apparatus and judicial systems. Both of them rely on contrary hypotheses testing which has an inherent high error rate. Contrary hypotheses have the logical properties that all cannot be true, but all can be false. You only have a chance to identify the truth if you guess correctly and include the true statement among the contrary statements you test. Guess wrong and you have zero chance of identifying the truth.

The most advanced intelligence analysis truth finding protocol is contradictory hypotheses testing. If you learn how to use contradictory hypotheses testing, no one should be able to deceive you again. Contradictory hypotheses have the logical properties that both cannot be true and both cannot be false. Use of contradictory hypotheses testing has the additional benefits of rendering evidence falsification, deception, incompetence, malice, and professional misconduct transparent.

It is a mind boggling intellectual power tool that will have you wondering why fewer than probably ten avant-garde professionals even know it exists and use it. Surely it could not be because few people want to know the truth and even fewer people want you to know or be able to find the truth!

A criminal charge provides an excellent example of how to apply contradictory hypotheses testing. John Doe is accused of violating State criminal code 204.9. John Doe is either guilty or not guilty. This can be stated as two contradictory hypotheses:

H₁: John Doe is guilty of violating State criminal code 204.9.

H₂: John Doe is not guilty of violating State criminal code 204.9.

Both statements cannot be true. Both statements cannot be false. If evidence is put forth in support of both statements, you immediately know that one set of evidence is false. You merely do additional tests to determine which set of evidence has been falsified, determine who falsified the evidence and determine their motive. I have used this methodology to analyze evidence in criminal cases in which police officers and prosecutors have falsified evidence and tampered with witnesses. I developed evidence analysis matrix methodology to specifically analyze criminal case evidence. It works.

Paired contradictory hypotheses testing is very powerful, but must be done correctly. The contradictory statements must be crafted so there are no other possibilities. If you have difficulty constructing contradictory statements, you may use the criminal code and see if there is an issue of law violation regarding the area in which you are attempting to determine the truth. If so, construct contradictory statements like the two examples above to test. If it is a complex situation, you may have to test many sets of paired contradictory hypotheses.

This analysis and commentary was written as an aide to help people get through the next two years of:

- (1) more intentionally committed small and major acts of malice and evil;
- (2) political, judicial and economic malfeasance;
- (3) greed and corruption;
- (4) and human pure evil deeds committed in desperate acts of self-preservation by our Professors Moriarty.

This is NOT about Mayan or Hopi prophecies. This is about warnings collecting dust in various government and corporate offices, some of them classified, from New Orleans to the Green Zone in Iraq. It is also about warnings probably collecting dust in your own home that you did not believe or understand when you first read them.

What we have to survive will probably not begin improving until early 2013. (The Mayans may have had the crisis timing about right, but I do not know what information they used to draw conclusions so I cannot address that.) It will not be the end of the world unless we let ourselves be sacrificed for the benefit of a few true evil villains.

There is another set of important information necessary for everyone to understand certain aspects of the evil we will be contending with the next two years. It is about government black projects.

I am merely pointing out how reality currently works. For myself, I would prefer a reality where I die in an extended outbreak of peace of natural causes at an advanced age. My reality simulation metaprogram does not contain this as a likely outcome.

For those who desire to operate with a more complete and accurate reality simulation regarding the various current “wars” and black projects, begin with the posthumously released disclosure video of William Pawelec. Mr. Pawelec was a good friend and as close to an insider a normal honest person can get and still be alive. The video may be viewed at the Disclosure Project link:

<http://www.youtube.com/csetiweb#p/a/u/0/yytSNQ2ogD4> (or do a Google search for “William Pawelec interview”).

The supplemental details necessary to understand the “black projects” and “deeper than black projects” Mr. Pawelec refers to, relate to who is behind them, why they need them, and why billions of dollars in PRIVATE wealth are being funneled into GOVERNMENT black projects.

The aggregate Professors Moriarty of this planet are desperate for technology with which to defend themselves. Some seriously seething folks have traveled a long, long, long, long, long, long way to put a permanent end to evil enterprises originating among the Professors Moriarty on this planet that have harmed them greatly in extremely ugly ways. These justifiably angry Travelers are here with the “man power” and technology required to implement a permanent solution. There is an optimum point in time they await when the Professors Moriarty are all assembled here and sorted out from the rest of us.

Although the angry Travelers and the rest of us who are not a Moriarty share a common enemy, the Travelers are not here on a mission from God to save our souls. That is our individual responsibility. In point of fact, they probably have no more collective concern for us than a Moriarty does. Whether we suffer damage or benefit when they complete their mission plan, the consequences will be collateral. It would be in our long term best interest if we remove or render the Professors Moriarty powerless ourselves. We have not been effective at that so far. Perhaps it is time to contemplate what you should say to a scum sucking sewer fish if it asks you to sacrifice your life to protect it.

The Travelers are here in pursuit of the perceived military, political, and social interests of those who sent them, at incredible cost. A multi-species expeditionary force in the millions needing to be housed in hostile planetary environments with mission specialized operational transportation is not going to show up in another solar system for cow delicacies or genes. It would be far cheaper to make them from scratch at home.

In preparing their defenses, after having been warned numerous times to stop, as have we, the Professors Moriarty want to organize and exploit all of us as a human wall of protection for them. They are pouring our tax dollars, the stolen future of our children and their own money into government black budget programs solely to develop weapons technology sufficient for their protection. They have no concern about any or all of us being collateral damage when the Travelers come for them, as long as they survive and continue in their permanent chosen state of evil. The basic attitude of the Professors Moriarty is 'If we go down, everybody on the planet goes down with us.'

If you are tempted to think the Professors Moriarty are running all these black projects to benefit mankind, do not. These people predominantly operate in one of two modes, fear or greed. If the black projects were to benefit their greed, we would already be trading with the Travelers and the Professors Moriarty would be raking in the profits. Funding government black projects with their own personal wealth is an example of them operating in fear mode.

Happy 2012 eve. Let us plan on celebrating New Year 2013 together. Come on over to where I plan on being then, but call first so I will know who is coming.
